For Piper

Most people, as they travel between places, are only concerned with getting from one place to another quickly and safely. I have to admit, that usually, I am one of those people.

Today though, as I was driving somewhere between Tambo and Blackall, I saw in the distance a great big old tree. There were no other trees around it; in fact, there were no other trees for kilometres in any direction. As I drove along, I started to remember another big old tree that I used to play under when I was a little girl—a place where I felt safe and loved, the place where I first met my guardian angel. “It has been such a long time since I thought of that game!” I said to myself.

“What an amazing tree!” As I drove closer and closer, I started to wonder whether the tree was lonely growing there all by itself. I thought, Surely, a tree as old and as big as that one must know a lot about the world, and maybe it might like to share what it knows. Perhaps this makes the tree lonely. I decided then and there, when the tree was almost level with my car, that I would stop and have my lunch with this old tree to keep it company for a little while and to remember my childhood game. So, I pulled the car off to the side of the road and just looked in the direction of the tree.
